Another special part of Thai culture is its festivals. One popular festival is Songkran, which is the Thai New Year. It happens every April and is known for its water fights. People splash water on each other to clean away bad luck and welcome the new year with joy. Another festival is Loy Krathong, where people float small decorated baskets on rivers to thank the water goddess.

Thai culture also values delicious food. Thai dishes are known for their spicy and flavorful taste. Common ingredients include rice, chili, garlic, and herbs like lemongrass and basil. Some famous dishes are Pad Thai, green curry, and mango sticky rice.

Thailand is also home to beautiful temples, called Wat. People visit temples to pray, meditate, and make merit. Visitors must dress politely and show respect in these sacred places.

The Mysterious Tracks on Turtle Beach

One sunny morning, Mia and her brother Liam were walking along Turtle Beach with their dog, Scout. It was early, and the sand was still cool under their feet. As they walked near the shore, Mia noticed something unusual, long lines and strange marks in the sand leading from the ocean to a patch of dry sand near the dunes.

"Look!" Mia pointed. "What do you think made those tracks?"

Liam crouched down to examine them. "They look like something heavy slid through the sand," he said thoughtfully. Scout sniffed the area and barked twice.

Suddenly, a park ranger named Ms. Yui appeared. She wore a wide-brimmed hat and carried a notepad. "Good morning, explorers!" she greeted. "Those tracks were made by a sea turtle."

"A sea turtle?" Liam asked. "What was it doing here?"

"She came ashore last night to lay her eggs," Ms. Yui explained. "Every year, sea turtles return to the beach where they were born. They dig holes in the sand, lay their eggs, and cover them up to keep them safe."

Mia's eyes lit up. "Wow! Can we see the eggs?"

"Not quite," Ms. Yui smiled. "They're buried and protected. We don't want to disturb them. But if you come back in a few weeks, you might see baby turtles heading to the sea."

Road Collapse in Bangkok

Early one morning, a part of Samsen Road in Bangkok suddenly collapsed, creating a large sinkhole in front of Vajira Hospital in the Dusit district. The hole was deep about 50 meters and wide, damaging the road, water pipes, and power lines.

Three cars and two electric poles fell into the hole, and the collapse came dangerously close to a police station. Fortunately, no injuries were reported. Officials quickly evacuated nearby buildings to keep people safe.

Authorities suspect that the collapse was caused by soil and water moving into tunnels built for the Purple Line subway, which lies under the area. The heavy rainy season may have made the situation worse, with more water weakening the ground.

The Bangkok Governor and city engineers went to inspect the site. They closed off traffic in the affected zones, cut electricity and water supply nearby, and set up safety barriers. They also brought in sandbags and concrete to stabilize the ground and prevent further collapse. The public was warned to steer clear of the area and to expect delays in traffic.

Bangkok officials promised to investigate the cause thoroughly and repair the road as quickly as possible so that daily life can return to normal.

Scammers and Hidden Crimes in Cambodia

Cambodia has gained attention lately for dangerous problems which are scam operations hidden inside casinos, hotels, and “scam compounds.” Many criminal groups use these places in Cambodia to trap unsuspecting people from abroad.

These scam compounds are run by organized criminal networks. They often promise new jobs, high income, or luxury life to people online. When victims arrive, they may find their passports taken and be forced to work in fraud operations. They might be told to make calls or trick people into sending money. These scam compounds are often inside buildings that look like ordinary offices, hotels, or casinos.

One common fraud method is the “pig-butchering scam.” Scammers build trust or even romantic relationships over time. Then, they persuade victims to invest money in fake investment plans. Once victims try to withdraw money or stop participating, they find themselves trapped.

Human rights groups report that people in these scam centers face cruel treatment such as forced labour, beatings, electric shocks, and threats. Some say they are treated like prisoners, with guards and fences around compounds.

In 2025, Cambodia's government stepped up its actions against these scam centers. Authorities raided many sites, and arrested more than 2,100 suspects across different provinces.

Despite these raids, many compounds still operate quietly. Weak law enforcement, corrupt officials, and fear among victims make it difficult to end this practice. Victims often do not speak out because they are threatened or fear for their safety.

Scam operations in Cambodia show how dangerous modern fraud can become. People must stay alert online and be very careful about job offers or promises that seem too good to be true.
