Text 3 - The First Airplane

More than one hundred years ago, people only dreamed of flying. Some people made strange machines with wings, but they could not stay in the air. Most of them were too heavy or had no engines.

Two American brothers, Wilbur and Orville Wright, wanted to change that. They lived in Ohio and worked with bicycles. They believed that building a flying machine was possible. They studied birds, made small flying models, and tested many designs.

In 1903, they went to a place called Kitty Hawk. The area had strong winds and soft sand, which made it good for testing. There, they worked on their plane, the Wright Flyer. It had a small engine, wooden wings, and a propeller. On December 17, the plane finally flew. Orville was the first pilot. The flight lasted only 12 seconds and went 36 meters, but it was the first time a powered machine flew with a person on it.

The Wright brothers didn't stop. They continued to improve their designs. A few years later, their planes could fly for many minutes and carry people. Their work helped start the age of airplanes.

Today, planes travel around the world. But it all started with two brothers, a beach, and a short flight that changed history.

91. Why was Kitty Hawk a good place to test the plane?

2. It could land on water
3. It looked like a bike
4. It had an engine and propeller

94. What happened after the first flight?

1. The plane crashed and was never used again
2. The brothers gave up flying
3. The brothers moved to Kitty Hawk
4. The brothers made better planes

95. What do we learn about travel from this story?

1. Travel was easier before planes
2. Airplanes were created by mistake
3. Early planes was faster than trains
4. Modern planes come from early ideas like the Wright Flyer
