Situation: Talking about a vegan wife

Nicky: Say, Ryan, I heard that your wife has decided to follow a strictly vegan diet. _____(1)_____.

Ryan: Well, _____(2)_____at first, but she's now working at the pet hospital, and feels strongly about not wanting to cause harm to animals. She's a real animal lover – she's even thinking about studying to be a field veterinarian one day She believes that animals love life and fear death.

Nicky: But isn't it true that vegans don't eat dairy or other animal products either? _____(3)_____using their products hurts the animals.

Ryan: She maintains that the egg and dairy industries cause immense suffering and death as well.

Nicky: But aren't you worried that she's not getting enough protein and calcium?

Ryan: _____(4)_____, it's a challenge. She spends a lot of time reading labels and looking for plant-based solutions for all the nutrients she needs. It does seem unnatural to a lot of people in our society. But she's serious about this, and I support her.

Nicky: How does this affect your son and daughter? _____(5)_____to me if the kids feel guilty about having pizza – or a birthday cake!

Ryan: _____(6)_____, we will do everything we can to put a stop to it. Since this is her personal decision, she is the only one who should suffer – or benefit from the consequences.

Nicky: _____(7)_____she stopped going to parties – or even if her colleagues stopped inviting her to join them because she can't eat what's being served?

Ryan: If that happened, of course I would be upset; I would find out how she feels about it, and also point out the social consequences to her. Then we could hopefully come up with a solution.

Nicky: _____(8)_____you are allowing your own wife to follow this drastic diet! _____(9)_____, I would encourage her to at least go half way.

Ryan: Well, we do believe that eating vegetables is good for your health, and we're passionate about protecting the environment, too. _____(10)_____veganism is becoming more and more popular. Plus, there are more and more vegan products on the market every day.

Part II: Reading Comprehension (Items 11 – 25)

New Dollar Coins

When the U.S. Mint had to design a new dollar coin to replace the old Susan B. Anthony dollar, it faced a problem. It wanted to design an appealing, distinctive golden-color coin that vending machines would recognize as an Anthony dollar, which looks like a quarter. Vending machine identify coins by their weight, size, and electromagnetic signature. They test a coin by passing an electric current through it and measuring the resulting magnetic field. Thus, the new Sacagawea dollar coin had to be similar to the Anthony dollar in size, weight, and electromagnetic signature.

Size and weight were easy to imitate, but the electromagnetic signature was not. The Anthony dollar had a copper core covered by a silver-colored copper-nickel alloy. All the golden alloy sample coins had three times as much electrical conductivity as the Anthony dollar. Vending machines did not recognize them. Finally, metallurgists came up with the idea of adding manganese, which has low conductivity, to zinc and copper. The result was a coin consisting of 77 percent copper, 12 percent zinc, 7 percent manganese, and 4 percent nickel. The pure copper core was covered with a golden alloy of manganese, zinc, copper, and nickel. This golden coin has electromagnetic properties similar to those of the Anthony dollar, so it is recognized by U.S. vending machines.

(Cited from Kaplan)

1. How to make a new dollar coin
2. The similarity between the new coin and the old coin
3. The process of the vending machine
4. A new distinctive design of the coin
5. The obstacle of making a new dollar coin

1. Testing the similarity of the coin
2. Measuring the magnetic field
3. Detecting the vending machine
4. Creating a new design of the coin
5. Measuring weight and size of the new coin

13. What makes the new Sacagawea dollar coin undetectable by the vending machines?

1. Weight
2. Size
3. An electric current
4. Appearance
5. An electromagnetic signature

14. It can be inferred from the passage above that an alloy is_____.

1. A magnetic material
2. A material that stops electricity
3. A mixture of metals
4. The core of a coin
5. A minor composition of the coin

15. The U.S. Mint could have solved its technical problems with the Sacagawea dollar by making it out of the same metals as the Anthony dollar. Why did the people at the Mint decide against this?

1. The metals in the Anthony alloy were too rare and expensive to use in the new coin.
2. Like nickels, dimes, and quarters, the Anthony dollar was silver-colored and therefore not distinctive.
3. The electromagnetic signature of the Anthony coin was not recognized by vending machines.
4. The size and weight of the Anthony coin made it impractical for use in vending machines.
5. The U.S. Mint didn't want to spend too much budget on this replacement.

Sketch by Carl Sandburg

The shadows of the ships
Rock on the crest
In the low blue lustre
Of the tardy and the soft inrolling tide.

A long brown bar at the dip of the sky
Puts an arm of sand in the span of salt.

The lucid and endless wrinkles
Draw in, lapse and withdraw.
Wavelets crumble and white spent bubbles
Wash on the floor of the beach.

Rocking on the crest
In the low blue lustre
Are the shadows of the ships.

The Dodo

Many plants and animals went extinct due to human activity. Few are as well known as the dodo. What stories have you heard about the dodo? You may have heard that they were fat, slow, and stupid. You may have heard that humans hunted them to the point of extinction. Legends and folktales do not tell the whole story.

The only place the dodo ever lived was the island of Mauritius (pronounced like "more-ish-us"). Mauritius is smaller than Rhode Island. It is off the coast of Madagascar, a much larger island east of Africa. There were no mammals on Mauritius before humans arrived.The dodo descended from pigeons that had flown to Mauritius. These pigeons found that this island had clean water and lots of fruit. Also, no predators lived there. They could relax and live in peace. Over millions of years, they evolved to become big and flightless. They became dodos.

Humans discovered Mauritius during the Age of Exploration. The Dutch colonized the island in 1638. They tried to farm and settle the land. They wanted to produce exports. They wanted the island to be more like their homes in the Netherlands. They brought pigs, chickens, cats, and other animals, even deer. They also brought the rats that hid on their ships.

The colonists hunted and ate many dodos. The birds had never faced predators. They were not stupid though. They learned to run from humans. They might have even adapted and survived, if it weren't for the other new mammals on Mauritius.

The cats and rats ate the dodos' eggs. Since dodos could not fly, they were unable to hide their eggs in trees like other birds. The new pigs, chickens, and livestock on the island now competed with the dodos for food. The dodos had to go deeper and deeper into the forests of Mauritius to survive. At the same time, the colonists were clearing the forests to make farmland. This total ecological attack was too much for these great birds.

The last recorded encounter with a dodo happened in 1662. A shipwrecked sailor wrote that he and his friends had caught a dodo. He said that the bird made a great noise and all the bird's friends ran to assist it. The men then captured them all. Truly this bird was too noble for this world.

No one noticed the extinction of the dodo when it happened. The concept didn't even exist at the time. The word "extinction" wouldn't even be used in that way for another 100 years. People just weren't aware of their impact on the environment. They didn't know about the delicate balance of life. In 1833, a study of the dodo helped to prove the concept of human-induced extinction.

To make things worse, the Dutch colonies failed. The Dutch abandoned Mauritius in 1710. Sadly, the dodo was not the only animal that was wiped out. It was only the most popular. Hundreds of plants and animals from Mauritius are now gone forever due to human activity.
